UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY

ANNAPOLIS, MARYLAND

THE U. S. NAVAL ACADEMY

Tomorrow when the midshipmen of the Class of 1980 put on the gold bars of an Ensign, U. S. Navy, or a Second Lieutenant, U. S. Marine Corps, they will become part of an organization which puts a high premium on leaders with vision, dedication and ability.

These qualities are vital, for today's Navy is a complex organization—one whose ships range every ocean, whose officers and personnel not only sail the seas but are engaged in construction and research from the tropics to the poles, whose supersonic planes have provided the training ground for many of America's astronauts, whose nuclear submarines are a testimony to America's engineering genius, whose leaders advise in the highest councils of government and whose Marines stand second to none where tales of valor are told.

It is a vastly complicated and technological Navy, yet one in which the human being is, in the end, most important. It is this person that the Naval Academy is dedicated to train. It is a Navy with a proud past and a promising future.

During today's parade both midshipman commanders of the 35th Company will receive awards. The Forrestal Award, a silver tray donated by the late Mr. Charles P. McCormick, is presented this year to the first semester commander of the Color Company, which by its overall excellence wins first place in the Intra-Brigade competition. The Stewart Wight Hannah Memorial Trophy is a silver bowl engraved with the number of the Color Company and the name of the present Color Company Commander. The bowl is displayed in Bancroft Hall during the academic year.

Guests are requested to remain in their seats until the Brigade of Midshipmen has completely marched off the field.

This year's Color Company for the Brigade of Midshipmen is the 35th Company. During the year the 35th Company amassed more points through intense competition in sports, academic improvement, professional competence, and extracurricular activities than any of the other 35 companies. Midshipman First Class Steven Streighttiff of Alexandria, Virginia, is the Color Company Commander. He has selected Miss Mary E. Collins of Coronado, California, as the 1980 Color Girl. Miss Collins will transfer the colors to the midshipmen who will form next year's Color Guard. The Color Company Officer is Lieutenant Commander Francis B. Grubb, Jr., USN. Commander of the 35th Company the first semester was Midshipman First Class Daniel R. Nagao of Silver Spring, Maryland.

In addition to Midshipmen Streighttiff and Nagao midshipmen in the Color Company who will graduate tomorrow are:

Matthew J. Boyne, Lee, Massachusetts
Jeffrey A. Briggs, Stoneboro, Pennsylvania
Michael A. Buzzell, Buffalo, New York
